China Sends In More Police, Restricts Travel

By Daniel Southerland Washington Post Service LHASA, Tibet — Chinese authorities have introduced tight con-irols in Lhasa, sending in police rinforcements, setting up road-blocks and imposing a curiew fol-lowing anti-Chinese rioting. Several planeloads of policemen were reported to have been flown into Lhasa over the past few days to support those already stationed in the Tibetan capital and to prevent further pro-independence

Meanwhile, airline officials in Chengdu, China, the main point for flights to Lhasa, said Monday that for 10 days no new air tickets would be issued to foreigners wishing to visit Lhasa. No reason was given for the move.

The Chinese sealed off three Buddhist monasteries near Lhasa. Journalists trying to visit one of the monasteries were turned back at a madblock by policemen.

Monks from these monasteries reanized two demonstrations in the past eight days calling for Ti-cean independence from China. The Sera monastery on the northern outskirts of Lhasa was once noted for its warrior monks.

A demonstration led by Sera monks in Lhasa on Oct. 1 turned violent, resulting in the deaths of at six Tibetans.

After first claiming that most of the six casualties were police offi-ers. Chinese officials in Lhasa now say six Tibetans were killed. Tibetan sources say that 10 or more Tibetans were killed and that more than 40 monks were arrested.

The demonstrators hurned down a police station in central Lhasa. Witnesses said the policemen, af-ter holding back at first, panicked in the face of the stone-throwing crowd and fired repeatedly on un-Witnesses said the policemen, afarmed demonstrators.

The controls over Lhasa appear to be aimed at preventing more demonstrations. Trouble is expected by some observers on Wednesday, the 37th anniversary of the Chinese Army's entrance into Tiner secunity seem to be approaching a state of martial law, although no judicial measures have been introduced of the type that would normally be associated with martial law. The Chinese have not been able to prevent the underground circulation of leaflets and posters calling of for united action against China. Ten people have been killed,"

U.S.-Canada Agreement to Eliminate All Trade Tariffs by 1999 if Ratified

By Stuart Auerbach Washington Post Service WASHINGTON — The sweep

ing free-trade agreement reached by the United States and Canada will create the world's largest open market, eliminating all tariffs be-tween the countries by 1999 and easing other Canadian restrictions on a wide range of American prod-ucts, U.S. officials have said.

President Ronald Reagan bailed the pact, reached minutes before a midnight deadline Sannday, "as an important model for other nations seeking to improve their trading

It was difficult to judge the trea-ty's full impact, because only a summary had been made available. But it was estimated, by advocates of the agreement, that it would increase the annual output of goods and services in the United States by $12 billion to $17 billion and create as many as 750,000 jobs.

The agreement must be approved by both the U.S. Congress and the Canadian Parliament The pact was reached after 16 months of hard bargaining that ended in two days of marathon, cabinet-level negotiations. As re-cently as 11 days earlier, the treaty appeared doomed when Canadian officials walked away from the table. Just two hours before the dead-line Saturday night, Canada's min-ister of trade, Patricia Carney, said

Sikh vs. Sikh: Fear Brings an Eerie Peace to the Golden Temple

By Steven R. Weisman New York Times Service

AMRITSAR, India — The Sikh religion's boliest shrine, which used to bustle with thousands of worshipers, sits quiet and nearly empty here. Sikhs and others say fear keeps them away.

Beyond the walls of the immense Golden Temple, throughout the state of Punjab, violence involving suspected Sikh terrorists has reached a new high. More than 550 people have been listed as killed in the last four months, almost as many as in all of 1986. In a major change, most of the killings have been committed by Sikh extremists against other Sikhs.

The eerie peace inside the temple and the turnoil outside are symbols of a crisis widely seen as continuing to pose the most serious threat to Indian national unity. With no end to the violence in sight, officials, politicians, religious leaders and many Sikhs say the sense of helplessuess has increased this year in Punjab, where most of India's 15 million Sikhs has

"The thinking of Sikhs has changed," said Professor Darshan Singh Ragi, one of five head priests at the Golden Temple. "They are becoming disgusted by this killing of Sikhs by Sikhs. They now have this awakening that they should not clash among themselves." Although they constitute only 2 per-cent of India's population, Sikhs have contributed enormously to the nation's agriculture, business and the military.

Now many people fear that a religious group long respected and even beloved throughout India is in danger of being increasingly seen by others as disloyal and untrustworthy. Such a development would make the situation more intractable and send re-

In addition to its other difficulties, Punjab, long India's most prosperous state and higgest agricultural producer, is facing tough times economically. PARIS — Amadou Mahtar M'Bow of Senegal, UNESCO's di-rector-general, who said last October that he would not seek re-election, has emerged as a leading candidate for another six-year

Mr. M'Bow's election to an unprecedented third term as head of the United Nations Educational, Scientific and Cultural Organization could lead to the withdrawal of Japan, the Netherlands and Canada, a European diplomat said.

Officials from the United States which withdrew in 1984, and Brit-ain, which left in 1985, have al-ready said that their nations will not return if Mr. M'Bow remains. When the Reagan administration pulled out of UNESCO in 1984, it charged that the organization had been grossly mismanaged and had been anti-Western under the stewardship of Mr. M'Bow. Britain and Singapore followed sun the next year, leaving UNES-CO with a total loss of 30 percent of its $150 million budget.

Mr. M'Bow, 66, told delegates last fall that he would refrain from soliciting another term in an effort to free the agency from such political controversy, according to an account of a closed meeting provided then by his spokesman, Doudou

This step was welcomed by U.S. and other officials as a statesmanlike gesture that would allow UNESCO to make the changes demanded by Washington and London as conditions for their return.

But last month Mr. M'Bow's home government in Dakar and the Organization of African Unity nominated him for re-election.

Reports in Paris said that Mr. M'Bow, the first African to head a major international organization. had lobbied African and Arab governments over the last year to secute their support.

The raids came as a convoy of loaded Japanese tankers headed for the month of the waterway after Tokyo shipping executives had sus-pended Gulf operations.

Jesse Jackson Trying Hard to Put More Colors in His Rainbow

By Paul Taylor
Washington Post Service
DES MOINES, Iowa — The Reverend Jesse L. Jackson peered over the lectern at an audience of 1,000 Iowa bankers and began with a confession. "I'm nervous to the bone," he said, feigning stage fright, "about appearing before such a rich and prosperous group."

No one believed him; no one was supposed to. The wall-to-wall grin gave it

Mr. Jackson was teasing away stereo-types, advertising ease and command in an unfamiliar setting — and getting right to the nub of the message that underpins his second bid as a Democratic candidate for the presidency.

The message is this: We may have preconceived notions of one another, we may be old adversaries, but we are all in this together now — all victims of struc-tural changes in the world economy, of corporate avarice and of a government that will not protect us from either. "Everybody is the same color, in the dark," Mr. Jackson told them, delivering the coda of his 1988 campaign. F. Scott Fitzgerald once wrote that there are no second acts in American lives. Mr. Jackson, who will formally declare for the Democratic nomination next Saturday, thinks otherwise. Ever since the end of his 1984 bid, he has been working to recast his image and broaden his base by shifting the locus of his griev-

It no longer makes sense, he says on the stump, to dwell on "yesterday's fights" about racial injustice. Today's battleground is "economic violence," and its circle of victims is much wider. "We need to redefine relationships." he told the bankers. "It's not liberal versus conservative, left versus right, or black versus white. It's the Darwinian ethic of the big eating up the small."

In the 45 minutes of speech making and questions and answers that followed, Mr. Jackson painted an economic landscape filled with the "unchecked greed" of multinational corporations that export iobs to "slave labor" markets abroad; with the "huge profits and quick fixes" of the "big money center banks of the East and West Coast and Chicago" that recycle petrodollars into the pockets of foreign dictators; with military contractors that earn billions in profits but pay no taxes, and with a government more interested in deregulating the economy for the rich than in preventing the loss of 38 million jobs since 1973 and 482 bank failures since 1982.

"I submit to you, my friends, there is nothing wrong with the community banker," Mr. Jackson said. "There is something wrong with the system."
Economic populism is hardly the usual luncheon fare at a bankers' convention. and Mr. Jackson's reviews afterward were mixed at best.

Ann F. Lewis, a friend and campaign adviser, says Mr. Jackson has been making the difficult passage from being seen as a "protest candidate" in 1984 to a "message candidate in 1988."

Nationwide polls suggest he is making a start in changing public perceptions. A Washington Post-ABC News survey taken late last month showed that his support remains predominantly monochromatic: 63 percent of black Democrats and only 10 percent of white Democrats back him for president. [According to a poll of 6,452 Southerners conducted in late September for The Atlanta Journal and Constitution, Mr. Jackson leads the Democratic field in the South, The New York Times reported from Atlanta. [Mr. Jackson, the poll said, held a substantial lead in 9 of the 12 states. Over all, he was favored by 27 percent of the 2,489

Democrats responding in the poll.]
But the data also showed that people's negative feelings toward Mr. Jackson are down by about one-third and that although he has not yet turned old antagonists into supporters, he is at least better positioned to get a hearing from them.

When political professionals point out that his standing is a function of his high name recognition in a field of unknowns, Mr. Jackson accepts the analysis but cannot resist tweaking those who would dismiss his achievement.

"They say I'm leading in New York because of high name recognition," he told a mostly black and Hispanic Labor Day rally in Brooklyn. "I'm leading in California because of high name recognition. I'm leading in North and South

The visit to Shikhany, while not revealing any new information on the Soviet chemical weapons program, was regarded by observers as a significant step toward greater openness by the Soviet military. Rats Enjoy the Nightlife in Chicago

By Dirk Johnson
New York Times Service

CHICAGO — At an outdoor cafe in the fash-ionable Rush Street area here, a waitress told a noontime customer about the day's special. The customer shricked in borror

It wasn't that the portions were too small or the prices too large. It was the rat -too big, too ugly and too close for comfort - crawling across the

Rats, some of them 18 inches (45 centimeters) long, are roaming this Near North Side nightlife district with all the seeming cockiness of the youthful revelers who swagger between singles clubs

"We hear stories that they're as big as cats around Rush Street," said Kay L. Murray, the city's deputy commissioner of streets and sanitation. It's bothersome because so many out-oftowners come to that area. And that's not exactly what we like them to see."

For the last year, the city has had a special crew of three baiting the Near North Side with rat poisons and glue boards. Those efforts have succeeded in rounding up many rats, Mr. Murray said, but they remain a serious nuisance.

The problem, in part, results from the age-old equation that rodents go where people go.

This affluent area, known as the Gold Coast, has no monopoly on rats, as the people living in public housing projects will attest. But the area does have political ciont and certain sensitivities. And with its dense population and dozens of food establishments, the Gold Coast offers rais a least that might make their cousins in other neighborhoods squeak

Moreover, a boom in commercial construction in this district has given rats plenty of places to hide and breed amid the rubble, and opportunities to dine on lunchtime scraps left by workers. With cold weather approaching, neighborhood residents are growing wary about four-legged home invaders, checking for signs of gnawing at their doors. The owner of the Rush Street cafe, aware that rats do little for ambiance and less for appetite, finally lost his patience. He loaded a gun and went hunting in the alley. I picked off a bunch of them," he said. "They're all over the alley. And they play in the streets, Terrified that rats might get inside his restau-rant, the owner has hired a contractor to install steel wiring around the basement walls, to be covered by an extra coating of plaster.

In his ground floor apartment in a restored mansion on Astor Street here, Jonathan Black could hear them scrambling around in his kitchen

When he came home at night, he could spot three or four prowling near the front steps.

In the first seven months of this year, the city documented 80 rat bites, up from 71 over the same period last year. Thousands of rats also infested a south Side neighborhood that was the site of an illegal garbage dump. City rodent-control teams worked around the clock for more than a week before the rats were vanquished.

"It's not that rats are so smart," said Terry Howard, the city's director of rodent control. "People are dumb."

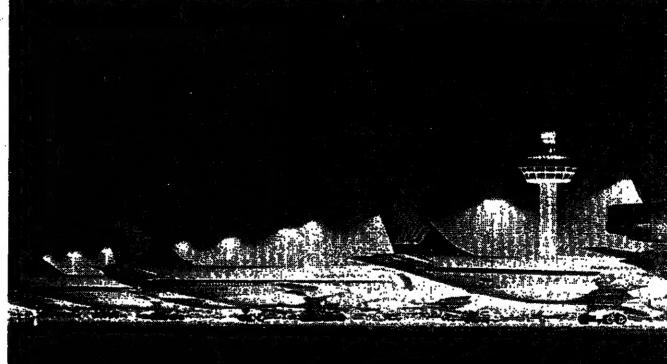

When Singapore's Changi International Airport was completed in 1981, it featured many unique solutions to the operational and organizational problems of a busy airport - a commitment to innovation that will be repeated in the construction of the new Terminal 2. Due for completion in 1989, Terminal 2 features a computerized Flight information Display System (FIDS II), employing new-technology display techniques. FIDS II will integrate the flow of information among the public, administration and operational areas to display the right information, in the right format, at the right place, at the right time. The S$19.5 million contract for the design, supply and installation of this highly innovative system was won by Philips in the face of strong international competition.

Yet Philips' association with Singapore Civil Aviation goes far beyond FIDS II. We supplied Changi's long-range (ATC) and airport surface detection radars, outdoor lighting and public address and sound systems.

And a Philips AEROPP message switching system enables Singapore to play a key role as a Regional node in the worldwide Aeronautical Fixed Telecommunications Network, AFTN.

In The Netherlands, the Civil Aviation Authority has developed an ambitious U.S.$750 million expansion project for Amsterdam Airport, Schiphol. And by the mid-90 s the airport will be capable of an annual traffic throughput of up to 18 million passengers and over 900 000 tonnes of cargo.

Philips is helping with energy-efficient terminal lighting, new-generation SNF-11 asymmetric non-glarea pronflood lighting, and many other technical aspects of this massive airport development project.

We have also been commissioned to implement the first international CIDIN (Common ICAO Data Interchange Network) node as a modernization of the existing AEROPP system for AFTN.

From technical systems to professional services, Philips has the corporate capability and organizational flexibility to meet specific needs of airport authorities the world over.

The Bork Nomination

The Supreme Court convened Monday for its 197th term, but with only eight justices: the admired Lewis Powell retired in June. There could have been nine justices in place had President Reagan proposed someone like him, or another conservative in the tradition of Justices Felix Frankfurter or John Marshall Harlan. By now, even a Democratic Senate likely would have given consent. But instead, the president chose Robert Bork and thus chose angry confrontation. For Judge Bork is not merely a conservative. He has long been a flamboyant provocateur, with a lifetime of writings to prove it. As a result, Mr. Reagan got the rancorous political battle he asked for.

The president's supporters insist vehemently that, having won the 1984 election, he has every right to try to change the court's direction. Yes, but the Democrats won the 1986 election, regaining control of the Senare, and they have every right to resist.

The division of power makes moderates of both parties decisive. For Mr. Reagan to nominate Judge Bork was to stick a thumb in moderates' eyes. The Senate need not and should not endorse views so alien to the Supreme Court's honored role as definer and defender of constitutional liberties.

Judge Bork has reviewed and revised his views to assure senators that he would not really interpret the Constitution in the sometimes bizarre ways suggested by the written record. Yet his underlying view remains. His Constitution is smaller and more closed than the living document Americans celebrate in this its bicentennial year.

Judge Bork is no racist. His integrity is not questioned, nor is his technical ability. Yet even with his five days of testimony. it has been hard for senators to know him in part because he recanted some. though not all, of his views.

The Liberty He Would Limit

The test, finally, is where he stands on large constitutional issues. Four stand out.
Civil Rights. In 1963 and 1964, as a 36vear-old law professor. Judge Bork wrote impassioned attacks on legislation to desegregate lunch counters and other public accommodations. He argued that the bill, by invading the liberty of proprietors to turn away blacks, was based on "a principle of unsurpassed ugliness." Not until 1973, when seeking Senate confirmation as solicitor gen-eral, did he publicly renounce this view.

He has criticized some of the Supreme Court's landmark civil rights decisions for reasons that vary from case to case. The bottom line, however, is almost always the same - unfavorable to minorities.

Free Speech. Repeatedly over the years, Judge Bork has taken a narrow view of the rights of expression. He declared that only the "core" value of political speech was immune from government restraint. Not until 1984 did he allow as how art and literature might be protected, and then only because they sometimes relate to politics.

Even this limited liberty, in his view, remains at the mercy of the majority when speech becomes advocacy of illegal action. The court and mainstream public opinion have long tolerated strident dissent, reserving punishment for incitement to imminent wless action. He rejects this tradition. Sex Discrimination. Not until two weeks ago did Judge Bork accept the Supreme Court's gradual, belated extension of equal protection to women. As recently as June 10, just before his nomination, he told an interviewer that he thought the 14th Amendment "should have been kept to things like race and ethnicity" and not extended to women. His conversion came so late that it is hard to know how seriously to take it.

Liberty and Privacy. The attitude of exclusion is even more evident in his views on the right of privacy that most Americans have come to regard as secure from prying government. The Constitution does not state a right of privacy beyond freedom from unreasonable searches and the like; thus Judge Bork does not recognize its existence. Yet great judges have found room for personal privacy in the concept of liberty enshrated in the Fifth and 14th Amendments.

The Framers' Larger Intent

His stringent philosophy springs from valid motives. Some justices have shamelessly warped liberty, as when the Supreme Court in 1905 upheld the "liberty" of New York workers to contract for substandard working conditions that the states were trying to regulate. Judge Bork has written and testified that judges must interpret law, not make it.

Most judges subscribe to such judicial restraint, Judge Bork carnes the idea to mechanistic extremes. The Constitution lives in large measure because of judges who aspire to objectivity but recognize they must make choices. Judge Bork seeks what he calls the framers' "original intent," He refuses to see, or laments, their larger intent.

Americans created a Constitution, added a Bill of Rights and have amended the Consutution repeatedly to embrace persons previously excluded. By their very breadth, noble concepts like equal protection and due process guard against abuse by the majority and invite generosity for the underdoe. That is the Constitution most Americans honor. Does Judge Bork? His earnest but madequate answers say no. So should the Senate. - THE NEW YORK TIMES.

He Fails a Crucial Test A Lack of Compassion

Our uncharacteristic silence in recent weeks on a hot, controversial topic has been the silence of second thoughts. When Judge Robert Bork was nominated to the Supreme Court, we hoped and expected to be able to support his confirmation even though his political inclinations are far from our own. Those many aspects of the campaign against him that did not resemble an argument so much as a lynching only reinforced our original instinct. But we find, at the end of a period of total immersion in the subject the written record, the testimony for and against Judge Bork and, most tellingly, the testimony by him - that we cannot.

By now the question may be academic; the Bork nomination appears to be gone. The reason for this, we suspect, is not the one being offered by President Reagan's perennially disappointed conservative constituency — that the White House failed to campaign for him as a great avenger of the right, a lawand-order man who would roll back the detested tide of permissiveness. Rather it was that his natural and expectable support never materialized in the political middle.

Why? On a careful reading of the evidence, a preponderance of powerful reasons to support Judge Bork was fatally undermined by a couple of powerful and critical reservations that finally, for us and, we suspect, for many others disposed to support him, could not be overcome.

This Can Be Said for Him

We are not being playful when we say that much of the "anti" effort was almost enough to make you "pro." The dismal political and programmatic content of some of the argument against him, as heard day after day in the committee hearings, could only confirm a suspicion that the time is ripe for a challenge to the lazy and dangerous cliches that often pass for policy wisdom and juridical profundity among liberals these days. There was also something disquieting in the idea that intellectual audacity and a challenge to prevailing legal orthodoxy were automatically to be punished or at least put down.

A second factor in his favor was the conventional view to which we continue to subscribe that a president has a large claim to support in nominating a judge of proven competence and distinction to the court. And finally there is the intelligence and professional achievement of the man. Judge Bork is, on the evidence, one of the most thoroughly schooled and knowledgeable students of constitutional law ever nominated.

What then, is enough to overcome all this? The impression, never disturbed throughout the hearings, that he did not change in the one respect that matters most: Judge Bork has retained from his academic days an almost frightening detachment from. not to say indifference toward, the real-world consequences of his views; he plays with ideas, seeks tidiness, and in the process does not seem to care who is crushed.

What He Has Failed to Say

What people like ourselves needed when confronted with this impression was modest, but critical — a simple assurance that, in addition to the forensic brilliance, the personal integrity and the care for the law, his moral sensibility could be engaged with the questions on which he had pronounced so forcefully, that in these great cases that were to have so profound and intimate an effect on people's lives, he had a feeling for justice, not just for the law. This was an assurance of which we could find only the palest traces in the written record, and one that he either could not or would not provide.

Judge Bork is driven by the idea that the judiciary in recent years has substituted values - inevitably its own - for the law, and in the process is dissipating its authority, threatening its legitimacy. And the exerucialing thing about his nomination is that, to some considerable extent, he is right in this. He has been pilloried in part for having had the effrontery to raise questions that ought to be raised and that are difficult to answer, about the nature of the constitutional provisions and the statutes the courts are called upon to construe, and about the proper role of the courts in doing so, It is not as clear as advocates would wish that the Constitution burs all forms of sex discrimination; requires one-man one-vote: hars any form of state and to sectarian schools; creates a clear shield of privacy. To some extent Judge Bork is being skewered for having rightly said so.

His saying these things is not our objection to his nomination, however. We go the next step, to what he has not said. The genius that has allowed the Constitution to survive for 200 years lies partly in its elasticity. Many of the nation's clearest and ugliest meanities have been mitigated only because judges used that elasticity to deal with issues that, for various reasons, the other branches would not. Judge Bork, it seems to us, is much more likely to note injustice but refuse to use the full powers of the Supreme Court to remedy it. He does not read the Constitution generously. Judge Bork, in his zeal to move away from values, does not take us to a valuefree zone, much as he might like to. He takes us to a place where the courts too often say no. Those results are expressions of value, too. He may go in a healthy direction, but he goes too far. - THE WASHINGTON POST

A Wily Casey Knew How to Raise the Ante

By William Safire

WASHINGTON — A few years ago, after the director of central intelligence, William Casey, threatened to try to jail journalists who dared to print information stamped "secret," I received a call from a federal law enforcement source.

"What's with your old friend Casey?" he asked.

"He's making all this noise about leaks, but we happen to know he's been spending hours alone, home and office, with Bob Woodward of The Post.

The FBI dosen't want to ask Casey about it because The FBI doesn't want to ask Casey about it because CIA handles its own security."

Ever eager to protect U.S. secrets from being divulged first to a rival publication, I called Bill Casey and put it to him: Was he being a hypocrite, complaining about leaks by day and leaking to a reporter at night? His gruff reply was unequivocal:
"I haven't seen Woodward for 18 months."

That was untrue, as we now know from evidence of frequent interviews in a book that appears to be titled "Bob Woodward." as told to somebody named "Veil." The FBf's unofficial surveillance Hype aside, a skillful journalist has penetrated U.S. intelligence agencies for the most important book on the CLA in many years.

was on target, and I am glad now that I wrote about the suspicions at the Justice Department and the baldfaced Casey denial.

That is because the initial brouhaha about this book centers on a supposed "deathbed confession" by Mr. Casey to knowing about the diversion of Iran profits to the contras. Did Mr. Woodward slip past the CIA guards and the vigilant Casey family to see the dying man alone in his hospital room? If so, did the brain-damaged, sedated patient understand the incriminating question, and did he nod yes and say "I believe" and did his head droop at he measured "Pleate leave"? as he murmured "Please leave"?

The answer is: It doesn't matter. That melodramatic scene, foolishly added to show enterprise and to squeeze a controversial news lead into the book, adds nothing to our understanding of America's most activist CIA director. The reporter's need to tack on a moral judgment — and to presume to pose as a public confessor for a man who chose not to as a public contessor for a man who chose not to confess — demeans and discredits his work.

What does matter is that a skillful journalist has penetrated U.S. intelligence agencies and their oversight committees to provide the most important book on the CIA since David Wise and Thomas B. Ross wrote "Invisible Government: The CIA & U.S. Intelligence," in 1974.

Ignore the hyped excerpts, which have led the president and Sophia Casey to lash out at the author, and are causing CIA bureaucrats (like Bobby Inman, the disgruntled former deputy director, who is now desperate to appear not to have been a source) to bewail the exposure of details about meetings on covert activities. And distrust, as I do. most direct quotation reconstructed without notes or unheard by the writer. Read the whole book; you will be much better informed about what went right and went wrong inside the Reagan administration and you will have a fair portrait of William J. Casey.

This is the Casey I knew well: bluff, wide-ranging, impatient, daring purposeful, enthusiastic, patriotic, secretive, cunning, deceptive. Bob Woodward's Casey is close to the real Casey, missing only the profound cancer-induced change in personality in the final year, his longtime admirers and ideological allies should get off the defensive and enjoy the recognition and respect he gets in this biography.

The cagey veteran of the OSS, I am almost certain, was not spilling fresh secrets. He saw himself as staying in touch with an adversary, protecting his back against his bureaucratic enemies.

William Casey was the poker player anteing up more information to see what was in the other player's hand, then bluffing when possible — or marking a card when necessary — to take the pot by putting a better light on what the reporter was learning elsewhere. America's most overtly covert man had a strategic mission as well as a concern for man had a strategic mission as well as a concern for his place in the history of derring-do, and Mr. Woodward offered an irresistible challenge to both. That was why the director stayed in touch, even though he knew his refusal to disengage flashed a green light to others to talk.

Did he know of the fund diversion to the contras?

Of course; knowledge was power, and the resolute denial of guilty knowledge was quintessential Casey.

However — if, on his deathbed, this murky man suddenly became lucid, confessed his congressional sins to the nearest reporter and sought absolution from his dovish critics. I would say: Wait a minute, that's not Bill Casey; why is be conning us?

Why Does NASA Push for Manned Space Flight? By Alex Roland

Sunday marked the 30th anniversary of the Sputnik launching, which prompted a shocked U.S. government to make a major investment in engineering and space exploration. One has to wonder what sort of shock it will take to return America's misdirected space effort to the right path. Clearly, the space shuttle tragedy was not enough.

shuttle tragedy was not enough.

More than 20 months after the Challenger exploded, NASA is engaged in business pretty much as usual, single-mindedly pursuing the nonsensical policy of manned space flight that it embraced in the 1960s. That policy will condetnn the space program to failure and commercial irrelevance if left unaltered.

Manned space flight is ruinously expensive—about 10 times the cost of unmanned flight. For virtually any identifiable mission in space, an unmanned spacecraft can be built to conduct it more cheaply and reliably. But NASA's obsession with manned flight leaves little money to acceleration of its launch rate, to develop unmanned technologies. Why does NASA cling to the idea of manned flight? Robots, the argument goes, lack the "sex appeal" astronauts. Manned space flight has been seen as a loss-leader to keep Congress and the public in the market for space activities.

So NASA has stubbornly fol-lowed an agenda laid out in 1969 that aimed at a manned mission to Mars, the only satisfactory encore to the moon mission. Intermediate steps included a space station, a kind of way station for the Mars expedition, and the space shuttle, to get to and from the station. The first element, the space shuttle, was sold to the public as an economical way into space. By 1972, NASA was telling Congress that the shuttle would be free — that is, it would fly when ye enough to amortize its de-velopment costs in 12 years.

NASA knew, or should have known that this claim was patently known, that this claim was patently absurd. Its own engineers pointed out, in internal documents and in external publications, why the shuttle could not possibly achieve the economies being claimed. But by this time the efficacy of manned space flight had become an article of faith within MASA.

of faith within NASA. Even the Challenger explosion — the result of NASA's desperate effort to force the shuttle, through achieve the economies that had been promised 15 years and $30 billion earlier - could not shake the faith. Undaunted, the agency is bulling ahead with its 1969 policy.

The shuttle, perhaps the most ex-pensive launch vehicle in the world, will remain the heart of NASA's launch capability for the rest of the century. Conceding that the shuttle can no longer compete eco-nomically, NASA has simply canceled most commercial payloads. NASA will instead allow private companies to compete against foreign governments, ensuring that the Europeans and the Russians take the lion's share of this hucrative trade, with the Japanese and Chinese right behind. The recent launch of the Ariane rocket signals the intent and the capability of the Europeans to cement their pre-emi-nence in this market while the United States is still grounded. Worse still, NASA remains comworse to the second step of its 1969 agenda, the space station. After the shuttle's fourth flight in 1982, NASA went to President Reagan to request approval of the space station, even though the shuttle was not then performing to specifications.

President Reagan finally approved the space station in 1984 at a cost estimated by NASA to be $8 billion. The National Research Council Committee on the Space Station, a government advisory panel, now puts the cost at $27.5 billion in 1984 dollars, or about $32.5 billion in 1988 dollars. And this estimate is based on NASA's own cost projections, which history has shown to be highly optimistic. NASA claims it can sustain the station with only eight shuttle flights a year. By the most optimistic projection, that is a burden on the U.S. civilian space budget of

of what is currently spent.

If the shuttle and the space station had some compelling mission, these costs might be more attractive. But there is little advantage to the space shuttle over expendable launch vehicles. Moreover, there is little work to be done on a space station when the contraction of the space station. station that could not be done better on a man-tended platform, one that was visited by astronauts periodically, repaired, refueled and left in place to do its work.

It is (ashionable to cite the Russians' space station as a rationale for America's. But theirs is smaller and cheaper, and has proved just about as useless as a U.S. station would be. What NASA must do is to plot a new course into the 21st century. The most compelling need in space is for a safe, reliable and economical launch vehicle to get us there. NASA should begin a major research and development program to address this critical need. To fund the program, it should cancel the replacement orbiter for the Challenger. And it should cancel, or at least postpone indefinitely, the space station. Above all, NASA must get over its enthusiasm for sending men to Mars and concentrate on getting rockets into space.

MANILA — A new rightist alli-ance is emerging as an alternative to the administration of President Corazon Aquino, should it fail to survive the worst crisis it has faced since taking office in February 1986. The alliance is built around two figures once powerful in the Aquino cabinet. Vice President Salvador Laurel and former Defense Minister Juan Ponce Earile. Both had to leave the government following bitter po-licy disputes over what they alleged was the "soft" approach to fighting the communist insurgency.

Formation of the conservative alliance is being accelerated by threats of another grab for power by renegade troops and an intensified communist rebellion that seeks to take advantage of fissures in the armed forces opened by the failed coup attempt by mili-tary dissidents on Aug. 28.

The public has been told in the sworn testimony of Lieutenant Colonel Oliver North that "Cascy knew."

The point is the cumulative por-

The point is the cumulative portrait of a CIA director, operating in a climate of official serrecy and distrust for virtually all public institutions, embarking on worldwide actions that made the Iran-contra affair

If Mr. Woodward's account is accurate, the now-lamous scheme of North & Co.'s secret enterprise to provide the capacity for unaccountable covert action worldwide was already operational. Assassinations were among services it could provide.

According to Mr. Woodward's de-piction, Mr. Casey worked diligently and effectively to find a way around Congress. He bypassed rules and laws, made end-runs around congresthrough their committees and obtained assistance for operations from Saudi and Israeli intelligence services. He "privatized" U.S. intelligence operations and U.S. foreign policy with a vengeance.

All this was possible because of what Mr. Woodward portrays as the passive but permissive style of Ron-ald Reagan in the White House.

Bork: Southern Blacks May Hold the Veto

N EW YORK — If the nomination of Judge Robert Bork to sit on the Supreme Court is doomed, as last-minute White House efforts to raise the "law-and-order" issue suggest, the reasons lie in faulty strategy and sharply changing voting patterns.

When President Reagan insisted in his weekend radio address that Judge Bork's opponents wanted to "thwart the desire of the American people" for judges who would bring criminals to justice, he unwittingly signaled White House desperation. Not only is "law and order" one of Reagan's old standby themes; but the fact is that the Supreme Court already has a functioning "law-and-order" majority.

In 1984, for instance, in U.S. vs.
Leon, the court by a 6-2 majority significantly modified the so-called exclusionary rule under which illegally seized evidence is not admissible at trial. The controversial Miranda rule, under which police must warn suspects that they have a right to remain silent, has been weakened progressively in several court decisions taken by major-ities of at least 6-3 and sometimes 7-2.

To summon Americans to battle for a Supreme Court tough on criminals, therefore, is unnecessary, since such a court already exists. Besides, it is not for criminal justice but for other social issues - the rights of minorities, for ex-- that conservatives so strongly want Judge Bork on the court.
That Mr. Reagan has to resort to such tactics is a measure of the poor prospects confirmed, if only after a tough battle in the Senate. What went wrong?

First, it appears in retrospect that it was a mistaken strategy for Bork supporters to try to picture him as a moderate, mainstream jurist in the tradition of the man he was nominated to succeed, Lewis Powell of Virginia, and of such great justices of the past as Oliver Wendell Holmes and Louis Brandeis. Whatever else he was, Judge Bork was not that, as his academ record and his writings clearly showed.

That record and those writings, when closely examined, demonstrated that Judge Bork had argued against the degree of free expression supported by Justices Holmes and Brandels, de-plored the latter's antitrust opinions, strongly opposed Justice Powell's arguments on affirmative action, and in many other areas held strong, idiosyncratic views that often were interesting and challenging but seldom were moderate or mainstream.

Judge Bork might have survived his own record, except for the fact that, on questioning from the Senate Judiciary Committee, he repeatedly denied it. Apparently having agreed to the strategy of being depicted as a moderate, he found himself time and again forced to say that he no longer believed something he had written in the past, or that he would not vote that way on the court. This appearance of a "confirmation conversion" saying anything necessary to win sena-tors' approval — diluted his supporters' of a nominee who once seemed sure to be arguments that he was a man of strong and independent judgment.

But if any one factor seems more responsible than another for the desperate straits of the Bork nomination, it is the new voting power of blacks in the conservative South. As Jack Bass of the University of Mississippi pointed out in an article in The New York Times on Sept. 21, none of the 16 Southern Democratic senators can expect to be support-ed by a majority of the white voters of their states; too many of those whites have migrated into the conservative Southern Republican parties, or will support more conservative Republican candidates in a general election.

These Democratic senators - like all five of those first elected in Southern states last year, each of whom was strongly opposed by President Reagan must depend on black voters if they are to put together winning majorities. Blacks, in the South as elsewhere, are strongly opposed to Judge Bork's confirmation to the high court; so Southern blacks are a prime reason why the Southern Democrats who might once have supported any conservative nominee now are lining up to vote against one of the most conservative nominees of modern times.

A more graphic result of the new voting strength of Southern blacks could hardly be imagined. The New York Times.

A New Alliance Is Needed

We recently returned from the Soviet Union where, with 150 other Americans, we raised the possibility of a Soviet-American partnership to end world hun-ger in talks with the head of the Soviet Institute for African Studies, the chairman of Soviet Athletes for Peace, health professionals, representatives of Soviet and American news organizations in Moscow, and many ordinary citizens, Fifteen million people, mostly children, die of hunger each year. This toll is equivalent to that of a Hiroshima bomb every three days. In addition, hunger accounts for much physical and mental retardation. Whole nations are affected and, indirectly, we all are. Experts have concluded repeatedly that we have enough food to feed nearly twice the world's population, and that ending hunger is technologically possible. What is needed is the commitment.

During World War II, the United States and the Soviet Union fought together to conquer a common enemy. We call upon President Reagan and General Secretary Mikhail Gorbachev to create an alliance once again, to make a joint statement committing themselves and their nations to ending hunger throughout the world by the year 2000. The victory would be one not only for the hungry, but for all humankind.

Too Simple to Work?

Regarding "Idea for 1988: A Natural U.S. Soviet Partnership" (Sept. 1):

Jean-Jacques Servan-Schreiber cites "simple" ideas that worked and then proffers one of his own. But because others' ideas worked does not mean this one will. "True security is higher knowledge," he writes, and recommends "sharing open research labs with the Soviets ... to change U.S.-Soviet hostility into a joint competition of trained brains in the knowledge revolution that is transformig the world economy."

This idea is indeed simple. Is sharing research labs with America going to get the Soviets out of Afghanistan, the Baltic states, Hungary and Czechoslovakia? Are they going to scrap their missiles, their submarines, their tanks and their warplanes because of it? One wonders.

After Evil, Understanding

Regarding the report "Painfully, Young U.S. Jews Get to Know Germans" by Serge Schmemann (Sept. 28):

I am of the generation that lived through the Holocaust. As a girl of 15, I stood in the streets of Munich cheering the troops as they goose-stepped for the first time there. Little did 1, a Jewess, realize what evils were to follow, in 1936. I was living in London with my husband and trying to help a small part of the refugees arriving after harrowing experiences, but alive and with hope.

Now I have contact with many Germans, young and old. I know that there are many who do as much as they can to atone for the sins of their fathers and grandfathers, and I realize that many risked their lives during those ghastly times to help others. We all must try to understand one another and to live together. That is why the Stanford University program is so important and why its sion should be encouraged.

EILEEN SCHLESINGER.

A Different Brand of Debt Regarding "Debt, Let Us Not Forget, Built America" (Sept. 26):

If indeed we do not need tight-fisted cracker-barrel economics, we certainly do not need the self-excusing superficia-lities of John R. MacArthur. The America-building debt he refers to created vast wealth-producing farms, industries and national infrastructure. The debt of the years, to the contrary, has been mostly used to purchase the sterile trin-kets of frenzied consumption, civilian and military. One has only to look at the decline of American manufacturing and to realize what we are getting for all we spend on the dodo-bird B-1B bombers. That a group shouting "supply side" should get away with its cuts in that most fundamental of capital investments, education, is sad witness to our, and Mr. MacArthur's, unwillingness to see the real problem: the misdirection of scarce, often borrowed, resources.

No Americans Applied

It appears that housework and child care do not appeal in such an affluent country as the United States. In desperation I am forced to search elsewhere to find a suitable, willing au pair even in Communist countries.

A move usually involves movers. They come to take your apartment apart and are supposed to deliver your goods in one piece at the other end. I write with some arthority, having moved 20 times in the last 20 years: London-Moscow, Moscow-

How to move? The simplest way is to do it yourself. When I went from London to Moscow I packed all my things in my car and drove. However, other moves have had to be farmed out. Of that I have good news and bad news. A lot depends on the quality of the firm. In Europe,

French can be good, too. First the bad news: had hired a Munich-based firm to take our goods from Bonn to Paris. The result was perfect — the packing immaculate, the planning excellent. When the time came for us to move from Paris to Munich I hired the same firm. This time, the motley crew was made up of tip-seeking Frenchmen and others of indeterminate nationality, working the "black economy." They arrived at 9 Å.M. - two hours later than promised. They departed at 11:30 A.M. with a third of our worldly goods in their van, saying that they knew of a good restaurant in Versailles (some distance outside Paris). They reappeared at 3:30 P.M., much the worse for wear, to finish loading.

We had been assured that the same truck would be used for the passage from Paris to Munich. In fact, our belongings were chucked from one truck to another in Frankfurt. The movers, however, stayed the distance. They turned up in Munich, babbling in various languages, to say that our "baggages" had arrived, that they had no Deutsche marks and wanted to know where they could sleep.

I said that was none of my problem and went to sleep on the floor. Most of our Meissen was irreparably damaged. I woke the German boss of the Munichbased Paris operation to tell him so. "You will be paid," he said. I never was.

And now the good news:
The only delivery that I ever had GARSTANG, England — The fall is without breakage was from Moscow to the cruelest season of the year, breeding greed out of corporate mellow—Helsinki firm. Nothing was broken: Then there was the delivery from Paris to Lancashire of all my worldly goods courtesy of a French firm. This delivery straddled two British and French pub-lic holidays. There were two men involved, each of enormous strength. The move was performed with precision. . There are certain recommendations to be made about moving within Europe. 1. Choose your firm carefully. It helps to listen to what other people have to say about their moves.

2. Be well-insured and always claim for breakage quickly. A local agent may come around to check the damage. The outcome is likely to depend upon the inspector - and on the country. I have found that the West Germans are willing to pay up, as are the British. In my experience, the French never pay.

3. Movers are always in a hurry. On their arrival at your new residence you must know precisely where you wish to have each piece of furniture put.

4. Movers are people. Offer them tea and sympathy. Today in Frankfurt, to-morrow in London. They have a job to do and usually they do it well.

5. Offer up a prayer for Saint Christopher, the guardian angel of travelers. I also carry a traveling icon. Who was it who said, "Superstition is the example of a feeble mind"?

Movers come in different sizes and shapes. (I find that the big ones are the worst.) They also come in different moods. They may be drunk or sober, rested or tired. It depends on whether they have a good frontier crossing or not; it depends, also, on what they were doing vesterday — was it a good haul from Bonn to Paris? A good frame of mind should be established at the beginning largely by the provision of tea. Many movers are hirsute, either because of negligence or simply because they have not had time or inclination to shave in the driving compartment, in which most of them sleep. British movers, however, prefer a bed at a truck drivers' stop, with fish and chips to boot.

Movers are strong in the back; not all them are weak in the head. Ohe of my movers, an Austrian, blocked a side road near the Quai d'Orsay for the best part of a day. A gaggle of con-cierges came to protest. He said in per-fect, grammatical French with only a slight Graz accent: "Mesdames, you see the Eiffel Tower there? That cannot be moved today. Our truck can be moved. But unless you have a written letter from the president of the Republic we shall not move."

Move they do, with different modul-ities. May they keep on trucking. International Herald Tribune.

For Many Maryland Farmers, Signs Are Pointing Toward the End of Tobacco Road

By Tom Vesey Washington Past Service

LOTHIAN, Maryland - Henry Jones worked down the rows of tohacco plants Friday morning for the last time this year, and maybe

He chopped the plants at the ground and, with a helper and his son limmy, loaded them onto a trailer and hauled them to the barns to cure. It was a time for hard work and some hard reflection, too, because the fields Mr. Jones, 69, has farmed in southern Anne Arundel County since 1933 may never again be planted with tobac-

"I like farming and everything, but it's getting rough," Mr. Jones said. "I'm old. I'm broke up. I can't drive the tractor. I don't know what to say about the tobacco. It's fading

Mr. Jones was talking like a lot of tobacco farmers in the county and in the rest of Maryland. Prices supply. Fields that once grew tobacco are now growing com for hog and chicken feed and, increasingly, hay for horses. Old farmers are retiring, and their children are not taking their places.

Tobacco farmers are casting about for new sources of income such as boarding horses. Or they are turning away from farming in favor of driving construction equipment, doing carpentry or tak-ing a few hours' break each day to drive school buses.

1984, 2,300 in 1985 and about 2,000 in 1986. This year, county extension agents estimate that the figure was near 1,500.

Maryland echoes the situation nationwide, which has seen a steady decline in farm acreage devoted to tobacco. According to Department of Agriculture figures, tobacco acreage harvested dropped by 38 percent in the last seven

At the same time, the prices fetched by Maryland tobacco have slumped from $1.75 a pound in 1981 to $1.18 last year.

"I have no reason to believe the with a modest price increase, think you are going to see a decline in tobacco next year, too."

Many farmers said a shortage of cheap labor for the labor-intensive work of tobacco farming was caus-

The Department of Agriculture estimates that growing and harvest-ing an acre of tobacco take an average of 230 man-hours, compared with the two to three man-hours for an acre of corn. On the other hand summer instead of his usual 12 to an acre of good tobacco can be 14. "Now people just don't want to worth $3,000, while an acre of grain corn may fetch less than $200.

"This no-smoking scare, this cigarette scare, has taken its toll," said Mr. Grimes, who does not smoke. "I'm sure the big tobacco compa-nies see the writing on the wall." In recent years, the consumption

Jones bemoaned the loss of farm-

"All people are doing now is building houses, stores and every-thing," he said. "They don't think about the farm. But when the farmer is gone, everybody is gone, and when all our land is gone, we're dead. Because we live off the land. We don't live off the roads."

SAMARINDA, Indonesia -Forests in Borneo are disappearing under an onslaught from commer-cial logging, fires, and settlers eager for land.

Indonesia owns 10 percent of the () world's tropical forests, more than any other country except Brazil, and it is using them to earn foreign exchange as its oil reserves dwindle. Each year the world loses an area of tropical forest the size of Portu-

Eight million more acres of forest are to be cleared for settlers during a five-year plan ending next

A West German forestry biologist, Berthold Siebert, suggested that the country's forests could be saved if Indonesia was compensat-

Miss Ivogün made her debut as Mimi in "La Bohème" in 1913, under the direction of Bruno Walter in Munich. Guest appearances took her to the leading opera houses of New York, Chicago, London and Milan, Her artistic home base remained Munich until 1925, when she followed Walter to

Her principal roles were Susanna in "The Marriage of Figaro," the Queen of the Night in "The Magic Flute" and the leading female parts in "The Barber of Seville," "Rigoletto," "Don Pasquale" and other operas. She was the first to sing Zerbinetta in the revised version of Strauss' "Ariadne anf Naxos."

In 1921, she married the tenor Karl Erb. They were divorced in 1932, and in the next year she mar-ried the pianist Michael Raucheisen, who died in 1984.

At the time of her second marriage she retired from singing, still, as her recordings of 1932 demonstrate, at the height of her powers. She then began a long and notable career as a teacher. Among her many successful pupils were the sopranos Rita Streich and Elisa beth Schwarzkopf. Miss Ivogin made about 60 re-cordings from 1916 to 1932. They show a fresh, silvery voice and a merry style that could be tinged with pathos in melancholy arias. Kenneth Slack, 70,

Oslo, Bonn Clash Over Next Chief Of NATO

OSLO—Norway and West Ger-many clashed Monday over the handling of the first open contest for the position of secretary-gener-al of NATO.

Oslo launched a sharp attack on the Bonn government, implying that it was running a damaging press campaign in favor of the West German defense minister, Manfred Wörner.

West Germany accused Norway of having failed to notify members of the 16-nation North Atlantic Treaty Organization before making a public announcement that a former Norwegian prime minister, Kaare Willoch, would run against Mr. Worner for the post.

Lord Carrington of Britain will step down as secretary-general in June of next year.

Government sources in Bonn have said that Mr. Worner has already won crucial U.S. backing for the post. Norway does not think that NATO, or its secret consultative procedures, would be well served by a public press campaign," said a Foreign Ministry spokesman, Per Paust, "We have no information that confirms the picture presented in the West German press." In Bonn, government sources said Norway had not informed allied countries that it would be offering a candidate before it made its announcement Aug. 14. A senior government source, who declined to be identified, also said that Mr. Willoch's position as president of the International Democratic Union, a conservative group, would disqualify him from taking the NATO post.

"That's rubbish," Mr. Paust said. "Willoch is already on record as saying he would quit his position in the IDU if elected."

Norwegian newspapers of all po-litical viewpoints have voiced outrage in editorials at the way the matter has been handled, with frequent accusations that Bonn is arrogantly trying to bulldoze its way into the job.

At NATO headquarters in Brussels, a Norwegian source discounted an earlier report from Bonn that apparent support for Mr. Worner would force Mr. Willoch to pull out of the race. The rivalry between the two men marks the first time that there has been public competition for the iob. Diplomats said the final choice was expected to emerge by consensus among the allies, with no for-major agricultural problems that have arisen between the nations. It eases Canadian import restrictions on wheat, grain and poultry products, and removes transportation subsidies provided by Canada for grain shipped to the United States.

In the energy area, the United States will allow Canada to take oil from Alaska's North Slope, and each nation agreed to end import and export restrictions.

Canada has some of the highest

Three attempts to achieve a free trade agreement have failed in the past 100 years, twice because of Canadian fears of annexation or economic domination. The critical issue for Canada was the creation of some shelter from U.S. unfair trade laws, which the Mulroney government complained were being applied capriciously to harass Canadian imports. Canada had demanded a binational tribuwith all trade disputes.

Some of Mr. Jackson's economic planks are newer. He calls for investing 10 percent of all public employee pension funds into a fund that would be used for housing construction, infrastructure repair and mass transit. Milan's Minis

Compiled by Our Staff From Dispatches MILAN — There has been a mini-revolution on Milan's runways, where the spring ready-to-wear shows are featuring miniskirts, minidresses and minisuits.

Only a year ago, the Italian ready-to-wear designers playfully revived the miniskirt in an effort to lighten their staid tailored collections and make them more compet-tive with frivolous French fashion. In March, the battle continued with each side of the Alps claiming the record for the shortest mini for the winter of 1987-88.

Relegated for almost two de-cades to the fashion attic, the mini suddenly has reappeared on city streets with a boldness unknown to its Carnaby Street forerunger. The halls of the Milan trade fair,

Gold and Minimize Your Risk.

Why? Because gold moves independently of paper investments, it therefore tends to have a stabilizing effect on your portfolio. The historical trend of the gold price has always been up. You can never be certain which way paper investments will go. But if you put 10-15% of your assets in gold, you can always be sure they are protected by something solid.

INTERNATIONAL STOCK MARKETS

Worldwide, Prices Rise, But Pace of Growth Slows

By LAWRENCE J. DeMARIA New York Times Service

EW YORK - The world's stock markets continue to show strength in the sixth year of the bull market, although the pace of expansion has slowed. In the quarter ended last Wednesday, stock prices worldwide rose by 5.7 percent, according to figures compiled by Morgan Stanley Capital International.

That compares with an 8 percent gain in the second quarter, and the first quarter's spectacular 22 percent surge. Those results are in dollar terms.

Many analysts noted that third-quarter gains were trimmed in the past few weeks as several important markets retrenched. The American stock market, which had a summer-long rally right up to Aug. 25, when the Dow Jones industrial average hit a record high at 2.722.42, pulled back sharply, mainly because the dollar weakened and interest rates moved higher. The Dow has since recovered much of its lost ground. Other

The third quarter's 5.7% expansion compared with 8% in the second and 22% in the first.

major exchanges abroad expe-rienced similar September swoons. The Mexican stock market turned in the best quarterly performance of an established market, shooting ahead by 67.9 percent in dollar terms. When measured against the peso, the gain was a spectacular 94.7 percent.

The poorest performance was in Italy, where stock prices slumped by 5.8 percent in dollar terms and 5.6 percent in lira

The three biggest markets had middling performances: U.S. equities gained 5.8 percent, while, in dollar terms, Japan's gained 4.6 percent and Britain's 4.5 percent.

More impressive, perhaps, than any gain is the general vibrancy of the world's 57 national stock markets, which are attracting international investors in increasing numbers as the global financial and communications networks consolidate. Perhaps $6 trillion in equities are now traded worldwide.

In any discussion of how individual stock markets performed in any quarter, one factor must be kept in mind: Just as within a single stock market certain sectors, such as technology stocks, outperform other sectors because they find favor with institutional investors for a time, entire national stock markets often do well in a quarter.

HAT is because billions are rotated into them by huge international players. These international investors, large corporations, governments, pension funds, mutual funds and individuals, control huge pools of money that slosh from one continent to another, filling up one stock market at the temporary expense of another.

Most of the money flows electronically between the three major markets, New York, London and Tokyo, but eddies flow into second-tier exchanges in Toronto, Frankfurt, Hong Kong, Australia and elsewhere. The internationalization of global finance and trade has also spurred the growth of smaller stock exchanges in Singapore, Merico, Spain, South Korea, Thailand and Chile, among many others.

The reasons for shifts from one market to another are often currency-related. For example, Japanese and British investors currency-related. For example, Japanese and British investors who pull out of New York because the dollar weakens, and thus threatens to wipe out stock gains in currency translation, may buy stocks in their own markets or in West Germany or Australia. But simpler investment decisions may be at work. Markets that have had a hot streak naturally tend to cool off as investors take

MoDo To Control Holmens

Purchase to Unite Swedish Firms

By Juris Kaza

International Herald Tribune
STOCKHOLM — Mo &
Domsjo AB, a Swedish forest products group, said Monday that it had agreed to buy more than 1.9 million shares in Holmens Bruk AB, a paper and paper goods company, giv-ing it effective control. The price is 1.4 billion kronor ($217 million).

The purchase, from Forvaltnings Ratos AB, an investment company, will give Mo & Domsjo, known as MoDo, 46.6 percent of the voting capital in Holmens Bruk.

The purchase, analysts said. brings MoDo closer to its ambition of building a third large Swedish-based forest products group beside Stora Kopparbergs Bergslags AB and Svenska Cellulosa AB.

MoDo's chairman, Matts Carl-gren, has said that MoDo, Holmens, and Iggesunds Bruk AB, a pulp and timber company, should be merged to form a group with around 15 billion kronor in annual sales, about the same as Stora and Svenska Cellulosa MoDo currently owns 39.9 per-cent of Iggesunds and controls 48.6 percent of the voting capital. Igge-sunds, in turn, holds 11.1 percent of the capital and 15.7 percent of the votes in Holmens.

MoDo also said it had agreed with Ratos to find a buyer, upon Ratos's demand, for the 9.8 percent of Iggesunds held by Ratos at 695 kronor per share. The arrangement essentially gives Ratos an option to sell MoDo its Iggesunds shares.

If exercised, MoDo would pay more than 406 million kronor for Ratos's holdings in Iggesunds, bringing its total cost for gaining control of Holmens and Iggesunds to just over 1.8 billion krozor.

Analysts noted that the price for Holmens, 725 kronor, was at a considerable premium over the 485 kronor level at which the shares traded Friday in Stockholm. Trading was suspended Monday at the Analysts said that Ratos's agreement to sell its Holmens shares was an apparent abandonment of its earlier position that there would be no advantage in moving the three companies closer.

Iggesunds's accumulation of its holdings in Holmens had been viewed as the start of a hostile takeover attempt and was criticized by Holmens's management.

One analyst said that the have the financial strength to make the large investments in plant and equipment required to maintain profitability in the paper and pulp

Sir Freddie Remembers Skytrain Wings Clipped, He Spends His Retirement Sailing

By Agis Salpukas New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Last year, Sir Freddie Laker traveled to Ayers Rock, a remote spot in Austraha's midlands that is considered the best location from which to view Halley's Comet. He had completed the 4,800-foot climb to the peak, he recalls, when a woman came up to him and said, "You're

"I was very impressed," he said. "Here I am in the middle of Australia on top of a bloody rock and someone recognizes me."

Last month marked the 10th anniversary of the beginning of Laker Airways: On Sept. 26, 1977, the first Skytrain took off between London and New York, charging passengers $135 for one-way tick-

Five years later, Laker Airways - which prompted drastic fare discounts at bigger airlines — was bankrupt. But Sir Freddie, as millions of travelers came to know him, is still remembered and recognized wherever he goes.

Now 65 years old, Sir Freddie — knighted in 1978 for his contribution to British commerce lives in a beach-front villa in Freeport, the Bahamas, and considers himself retired.

But he still keeps a toe in the water: He serves on the Grand Bahamas Tourist Promotion Board and is involved in a package-tour business centered around the Princess Hotels, Casino and Country Club in Freeport, a venture of Lonrho Ltd., a British conglomerate run by Roland W. (Tiny)

Mr. Rowland, he says, is one of the few business-men who stood by him during Laker's bankruptcy and the three-year lawsuit in which Laker's liqui-dators charged that some of the world's biggest sirlines colluded to destroy Laker Airways. The suit was ultimately settled out of court.

At its peak, in 1980, the airline was carrying one of every five transatlantic passengers on its DC-10 planes. "I carried 3.5 million people across the Atlantic, a substantial number by any standard," Sir Freddie said in a telephone interview from Miami, where he and his wife were on a visit.

These days, Sir Freddie spends most of his time motoring on his 58-foot (17.7-meter) boat, taking pleasure trips in the Caribbean. He and his wife, whom he described as "a great sailor," make do without a crew, he says, performing all the navigating, cooking and cleaning on the boat.

His boat, "Jacqueline," is named after his wife, a 43-year-old English woman who worked as a flight attendant for Eastern Airlines when she first came to the United States more than 20 years ago. Sir Freddie met her on an Air Florida slight to London

High Court Rules Some U.S. Banks Can Trade Stocks

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Supreme Court cleared the way Monday for state-chartered banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve System to enter the business of trading stocks and bonds. The court, without comment, left The court, without comment, let intact a ruling that the Federal Deposit Insurance Corp., or FDIC, did not violate a Depression-era law by permitting such banks to move into the securities business. with a deregulatory trend that has wiped out barriers between the banking industry and other forms of commerce, ruled in April that the FDIC did not violate the Glass-Steagall Act of 1933. Congress passed that law in response to a wave of bank failures that many saw as the result of stock speculation by the banking industry.

The appeals court said that Congress "clearly intended" to allow the banks "to maintain subsidiary or affiliate relationships with securities firms."

The FDIC regulates about 9,000 state banks that are not members of the Federal Reserve System. It in-sures deposits, as well, of Fed mem-bers and national banks that are under the jurisdiction of the comptroller of the currency.

The Federal Reserve Board has tried, in some cases, to stem the tide of deregulation. But the Supreme Court ruled last year, for example, that the Fed lacks the power to limit the growth of so-called non-bank banks, which gave businesses such as brokerage firms, department stores and conglomerates free rein to establish banking facilities. In January, the Supreme Court ruled that national banks could set up discount securities brokerage outlets wherever they wanted.

In April, the court refused to block the interstate spread of nonbank banks in a case that allowed U.S. Trust Corp. of New York to establish a subsidiary to run a non-bank bank in Florida. Nonbank banks are limited service banks that offer either checking accounts or commercial loans but not both, as do full-service banks.

In the case acted on Monday, the Investment Company Institute, representing mutual fund opera-tors, and the Securities Industry Association had appealed the appeals court ruling on the ground that it had wiped out an interpreta-tion of banking law that had stood for more than 50 years.

The Reagan administration, supporting the appeals court ruling, said it is not always unsafe for banks to be in the stocks-and-bonds business.

Thrift Agency Proposes Rules

WASHINGTON — The U.S. Federal Home Loan Bank issued Monday proposed rules that would enable it to set a mini-mum capital standard for federally insured savings and loans.
The proposals did not state a specific capital level, but the bank's board, in an accompanying statement, said that it "con-tinues to believe that it is imper-ative that all insured institutions achieve a minimum 6 percent capital level as quick-ly as (easible."

The bank set a 30-day deadline for public comment on the proposals and scheduled public hearings Nov. 3-4 at its headquarters in Washington

Australian Airlines Will Buy Boeings Before Airbus 320s

SYDNEY - Australian Airlines said Monday that it had deferred an order for nine Airbus A320 jets, due for delivery between April 1989 and June 1990, and would buy four Boeing 737-300s instead.

The chairman, Neil Smith, said the government-owned airline would now take delivery of the aircraft from Airbus Industrie, the European consortium, in the 1990s.

He said the delay was unrelated to the suitability of the A320. The airline, he said, acted out of "concern at the impact on its resources of introducing a completely new type of aircraft at a time when significant change is likely to occur in Australian domestic aviation

The government's two-airline agreement, restricting main route domestic flights to privately owned Ansett Airlines and Australian Airlines, is expected to be terminated in 1990. The Labor governmen has also raised the possibility of privatizing Australian Airlines. James Strong, general manager of Australian Airlines, said the carrier would buy the four 737s from Boeing Co. in 1988-89. And, he said, the airline would bring a fourth A300 leased to Air Niugini, the Papua New Guinea national carrier, back to its operating fleet. The fleet currently comprises three Airbus A300s, 12 Boeing 737-300s, 10 Boeing 727-200s and five McDonnell Donglas Corp. DC9s. Smart Iddles, senior vice president of Airbus Industrie, minimized the deferral, noting that Airbus had firm orders for 287 A320s.

"Airbus Industrie expects that the previous Australian Airlines delivery positions in 1989-90 will be quickly taken up by other customers." he added.

Managers Agree to Buy MFI From ASDA for £505 Million

LONDON — ASDA-MFI Group PLC said Monday that it would sell its MFI furniture retailing unit to senior management for £505 million ($820 million).

The new company formed by se-mor members of the ASDA management is led by Derek Hunt, who built up the MFI business before it merged with the ASDA supermarket chain two years ago.

ASDA's program of disposing of noncore operations has now realized £600 million.

The proceeds of the sales of MFI and two other units will be used to finance ASDA's £1 billion investment plan, which envisions the opening of 34 new superstores.

ASDA shares opened at 204 pence on the London Stock Exchange, down from Friday's 207 million shares. ASDA's group managing director, John Hardman, said the buyout was "a further stage in our stated objective of concentrating all of our resources on the fast-expanding superstore business." In July, ASDA said it planned to sell MFI, the dairy division of Associated Fresh Foods Ltd., and Allied Carpet Stores Ltd.

It made the Associated Foods sale the following month for £80 million. ASDA said negotiations for the sale of Allied were at an lvanced stage. The board of the new company that will own MFI said it would seek a listing on the stock exchange within three years.

The MFI sale would have entitled ASDA to receive £470 million in cash and the repayment of a £35 million intercompany loan. ASDA has chosen to receive shares representing 25 percent of the new MFI/Hygena group in-stead of £52 million of the cash

Philips Plans to Float 20% of Shares In Polygram, Its Record-Making Unit

AMSTERDAM — Philips NV said Monday that in November it plans to float 15 million shares, or 20 percent, of its record-making subsidiary, Polygram NV.

A spokesman for the electronics group said 10.5 million shares would be issued in the United States and 4.5 million elsewhere. This would represent 20 percent of the enlarged share capital.

The spokesman, Ben Geerts, added that Philips wants to retain a controlling interest in Polygram, but that the parent company believes a more independent Polygram would have better growth prospects.

Polygram posted a net profit of 170 million guilders ($82 million) in 1986 on sales of about 2.9 billion guilders.

Share analysts said the issue was expected to be priced at around $16 per share. At that price, Philips would retain about 500 million Polygram was set up in 1962 as a joint venture by Philips and

VEBA: German Corporation with the Largest Shareholder Base

The capital stock is owned by more than 600,000 shareholders including 90% private individuals and nearly 35,000 VEBA employees. In March of this year VEBA was fully privatized, thus initiating a new phase in the Company's development.

Latest Figures Again Point to Favorable Results

Although Group external sales declined to DM 19.6 billion, owing primarily to low oil prices, net income reached DM 304 million, matching the high level of the first half of

All of VEBA's divisions were profitable. The Electricity Division kept prices constant. Preussen Elektra's deliveries were up 8.3%. HÜLS attained above-average results. Thermoplastics and organic chemicals performed well. VEBA OEL maintained its position. Refinery capacity utilization was again at 95%. The Trading and Transportation Division showed satisfactory

On the Threshold of a New Phase of Development

Thanks to the Brokdorf power station, nuclear energy now accounts for 70% of PreussenElektra's total output. For unit 4 of the Heyden coal-fired power plant the process of going into operation continued. Approval was given for a new 520 MW hard coal facility. Braunschweigische Kohlen-Bergwerke AG is now almost wholly owned by VEBA.

DEMINEX shared in the success of the North Sea oil fields. RHENUS significantly reinforced its market position through the acquisition of Weichelt, the forwarding agents. VEBA acquired a 12.5% participation in HAPAG-LLOYD. RUHRGLAS was sold.

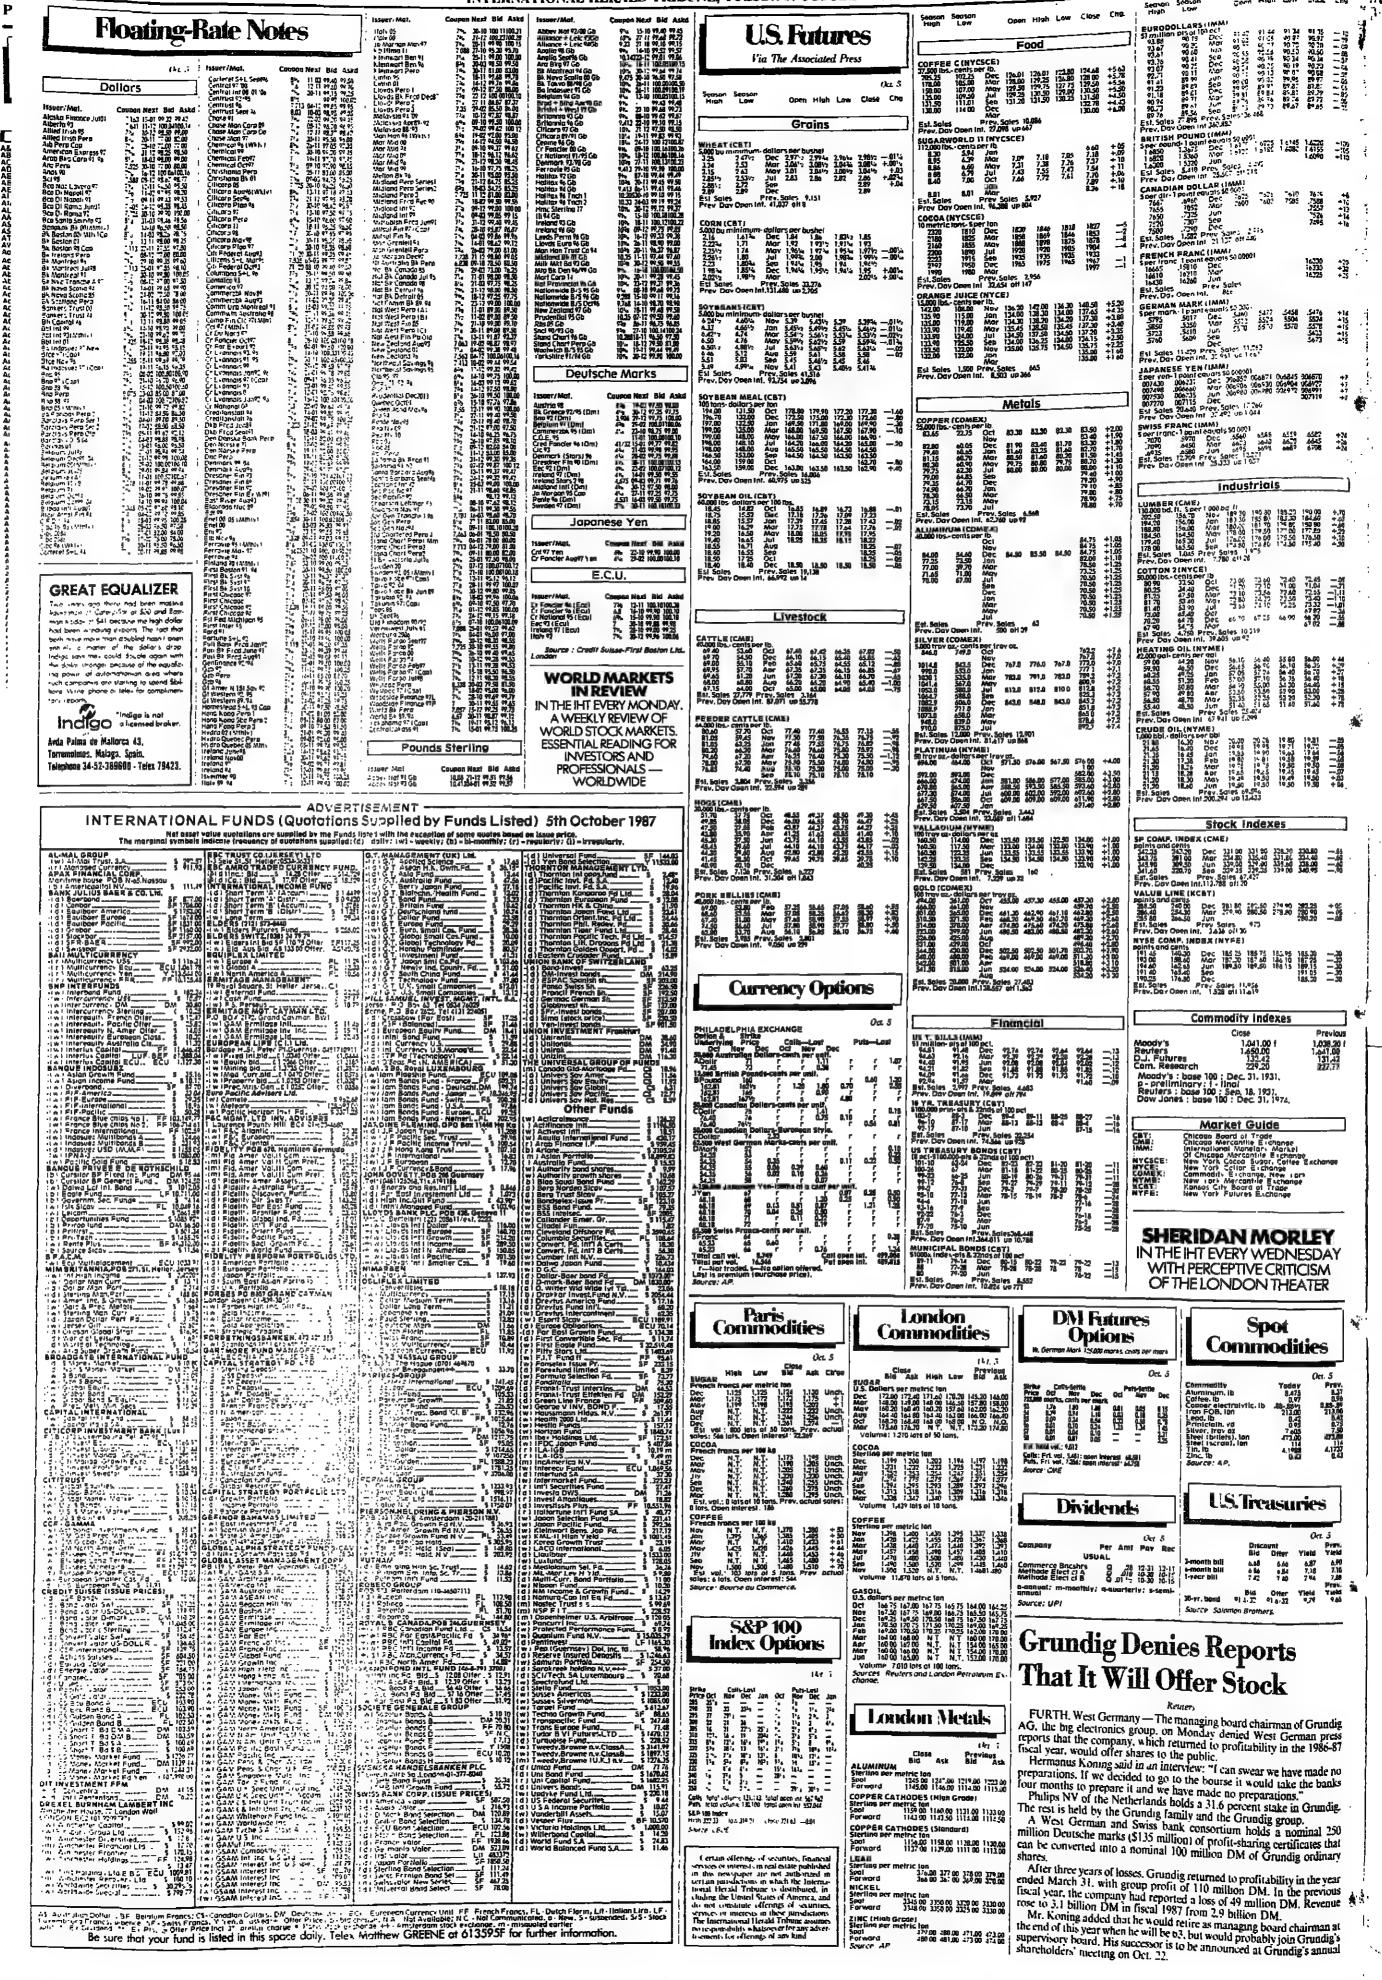

An agreement was signed calling for the acquisition of the chemical operations of DYNAMIT NOBEL - thus giving VEBA a foothold in high-growth, future-oriented sectors. This acquisition has already been approved by the German Federal Cartel Office. Important steps have thus been taken to ensure realization of projected rates of growth.

VEBA Shares Show Strength

During the past two years, VEBA's stock has risen 100 points. The dividend yield was above average. Both trends attest to the sound quality of VEBA shares - a healthy mix of growth potential with security. Over the next five years, a total of DM 19 billion will be invested in expanding the Group.

Confidence in the Future

The strong cash flow is projected to improve still further. Corporate strategic plans are in the process of realization. Present developments point to overall results for 1987 matching the previous year's level and a dividend of at least the DM 10 per share that was paid in 1986.

The lofty price earnings ratio in Japan. which averages 70, discourages many foreign investors, but that has not hurt the market. "Peo-ple are still nervous abroad." Mr. Brand noted, "but the Japanese are accustomed to it."

Orest Pokladok, an analyst at Carl Marks & Co., a U.S. broker that executes trades abroad, said he is "still sort of wary of Japan because of the high P/Es, although there is evidence that business is picking up," especially in the do-

It is fairly easy for American investors to buy Japanese equities. There are mutual funds that specialize in Japanese stocks, and many of those stocks, such as Mit-subishi. A new car from Audi is always more than a car - it's a concept.

A new carfrom Audialways incorporates technology which puts it years ahead of the competition. Take the new Audi 90, for instance. A shining example of how to combine performance and frugality. But for Audi having a 100 kW/136 bhp five cylinder injection engine with a capacity of 2.2 litres makes no sense unless the car is equipped with the drive and running gear necessary to provide safe driving characteristics. The new Audi 90 is available with front-wheel drive or, as a quattro. with permanent four-wheel drive. A new feature in the quattro is the self-locking Torsen differential. It regulates the division of power between the two axles, automatically and variably. The result is that you always have optimum traction, a valuable safety margin under extreme conditions. And it also makes the quattro fully compatible with an anti-lock brake system.

In the past, a dynamic car design often meant limited interior space. Not so in the new Audi 90. It measures 1.90 m from pedal cluster to rear seat backrest - dimensions which send it to the top of its class. it is also the only car in its class to have a fully galvanized body - currently the best anticorrosion protection available. And its aerodynamic shape reduces fuel consumption and wind noise. In a word, the Audi 90 sets the standard for the nineties. Why not go and see for yourself.

Germans Advised To Shop More

FRANKFURT - Expanding West Germany's shopping hours would boost consumption and contribute to a reduction in international trade imbalances, Robert Heller, a governor of the U.S. Federal Reserve Board, has said in a

(Continued from first finance page) companies have made so-called interest-rate swaps to convert their variable-rate loans into fixed-rate, long-term credits. Such arrangements usually are made with foreign banks that find it cheaper to raise fixed-rate debt while preferring floating-rate debt because of holding short-term deposits. The prospect of higher rates in this environment raises questions about the impact on consumers and businesses alike: If rates on adjustable-rate mortgages were to rise sharply, would many people lose their homes? Would that cause a spate of forced sales that would force down real estate values? Would that, in turn, cause problems with the increasingly popular home equity loans that are based on current real estate values? And would businesses caught in the spi-ral start to go bankrupt? These issues have become pressing because of fears among some economists that inflation may be re-emerging, primarily because of higher oil prices and the cheaper

Greenspan Urges Banks Be Allowed To Expand Into Securities Trading

Federal Reserve Board, said Monday that banks should be allowed to expand into securities activities but should be forbidden to apply federal insurance and borrowing advantages to these fields. Mr. Greenspan, in his first appearance before Congress as head of the central bank, said legislators should proceed cautiously in repealing the 1933 Glass-Steagall Act, which keeps banks from engaging in most forms of securities underwriting.

"One has to be very careful when one evaluates changes of funda-mental institutional structures that have prevailed for more than a gen-eration," Mr. Greenspan told the House Commerce Committee's subcommittee on telecommunications and finance.

In particular, he said, Congress must ensure that banks do not gain a competitive advantage over other financial services companies because they can borrow money at below-market rates from the Fed and have federal insurance on their

As part of a bill bailing out of the Federal Savings & Loan Insurance Corp. this summer, Congress placed a moratorium on further deregulation of banking until next March. Mr. Greenspan, never an advocate of the moratorium, told the subcommittee that extending it would damage the U.S. financial community by forcing it to face changes while bearing the burdens of old regulations. Mr. Greenspan also said that ex-

Estimates of Brunei Oil, Gas Reserves Up Sharply

Reuers

BANDAR SERI BEGAWAN, Brunei — Estimates of Brunei's oil and gas reserves have been revised sharply upward, the U.S. Embassy said Monday in its annual peuroleum report.

The report quoted a survey by Brunei Shell Petroleum, the country's sole producer, as saying that proven oil reserves contained an estimated 1.6 billion barrels in January 1986, up from the estimated 934 million barrels of a year earlier. Gas reserves were estimated at 12 trillion cubic feet, up from 8.4 trillion cubic feet.

The report said said the increases were caused in part by a change in the way reserves are estimated.

ECONOMICS IN PERSPECTIVE: A Critical History

By John Kenneth Galbraith. 324 pages. $19.95. Houghton Mifflin, 2 Park Street, Boston, Mass. 02108.

Reviewed by Christopher Lehmann-Haupt

CONOMICS in Perspective," the title of John Kenneth Galbraith's 25th and latest book, is tonic all by itself. Anyone can tell us what the prevailing economic issues of the day are: productivity, rising interest rates, the falling dollar, the specter of inflation, the national debt, the trade deficit, the issue of protectionism, and the drawbacks and advantages of foreign investment in our domestic economy. But to see these matters in perspective? For that we may need the likes of Professor John Kenneth Galbraith.

sor John Kenneth Galbraith.

Placing economics in the context of history serves Galbraith several useful purposes. It allows him to propel us within 30 pages to the middle of the 15th century, the dawn of the Age of Mercantilism, and lets him concentrate thereafter on the mainstream of European and American economic life. As he observes American economic life. As he observes: Where, as before the rise of capitalism or in the subsistence economies of our own time. there was - or is - little that is interesting and even less to be discovered in economic life, I accommodate to this fact. Economic ideas are not very important when and where there is no economy."

It further permits him to expound with subtlety and us to understand with clarity the various ideas that belong in an essential economic primer. Take, for example, the clusive law named after the French economist Jean-Baptiste Say. It would be one thing to have to remember that, as Gaibraith puts it, "out of the production of goods came an effective (that is to say, actually expended) aggregate of demand sufficient to purchase the total supply of goods." It grows easier to understand what this means when Galbraith redefines Say's Law in various settings. Does supply always equal demand? Say's Law was debated for more than g century, but when the Great Depression occurred in 1929, the English economist John Maynard Keynes "held and influentially argued" that it was the law that would have to be repealed, because "there could be" and evidently then was "a shortage of demand."

Detop

But most provocatively, his historical perspective enables Galbraith to develop his critique of what he characterizes as the classical and neoclassical idolatry of free-market forces. As the Keynesian revolution triumphed in Britain and the United States, it left intact the classical system insofar as it distributed power among "the corporation, trade union, individual worker and consumer."

Thus, when the wage-price spiral produced Thus, when the wage-price spiral produced double-digit inflation in the 1970s, we had no theoretical framework or acceptable historical tradition for handling it, because to do so meant intervening with state controls in what was still perceived as the free-market portion of the economy. The monetarist alternative of the was still perceived as the free-market portion of the economy. The monetarist alternative of tamping down the money supply simply produced double-digit interest rates, the overall result of which was "the deepest economic depression since the Great Depression."

So where does that leave us? In a conclusion called "The Present as the Future," he warms why the notion of the classical free market will continue to exert a compelling and destructive illusion, and offers a somewhat desultory shopping list of other concerns — the continuing habit of American business of perceiving its government as the enemy, the success with which Japan has avoided this tendency, and the likelihood that the older industrial countries will seek refuge in tariff protection. "Once protective tariffs were for infant industries; now they are for the old and putatively senile."

Korchnoi defeated Seirawan, who used to be his match second, by clever tactical play in the 15th round.

The course taken by their English Opening, Double Fianchetto Defense Variation, was surely no surprise for Seirawan since Korchnoi was following his 1986 game in Jerusalem against Dmitry Gurevich through 9. .QN-Q2.

The Octopus Legend Goes On

are dead, as dead as the octopus that came hurtling out of the upper deck and landed near the Toronto dugout during Sanday's seventh iming. At least the octograss, and was carried away, gin-gerly, by the dugout guard.

Think of it this way: Some Detroit Tiger fan not only brought an octopus to a baseball game but he (we're assuming it was a he) sat with it for a full six innings before tossing it over the side.

The Tigers survived this premature celebration to win the American League's Eastern Division tithe with a 1-0 victory. Frank Tanana's slow curves made the kittish Blue Jays look as helpless as an octopus out of water.

The Blue Jays had been out of their element ever since beating the Tigers three straight in To-ronto a week earlier. They finball's classic flops, thoroughly earning the fabled Detroit octopus award. The hurling of octo-puses is a fine local tradition like setting fires to cars when the Tigers win the World Series, as happened in 1984.

According to local historians. octopus-throwing dates back to the 1952 Stanley Cop playoffs, when the Red Wings were winning eight straight games. Some-body equated the eight-legged ac-complishment, and tossed an octopus onto the ice of the hockey rink. The tradition was revived along with the Red Wings last spring, and has now carried over into the fall. Anyway, it beats torching cars.

The Tigers put the Blue Jays on ice by not letting George Bell beat them. The slumping star did manage a leadoff single on Sunday, was intentionally walked the next

Giants Finish With a Bang

SAN FRANCISCO - Bob Brenly's 10th-inning home run gave the Western Division champion San Francisco Giants a 5-4 victory over Atlanta in Sunday's regular-season finale.

"What a fitting way to end it—with a home run," said Manager Roger Craig. "Win 90 games (the Giants finished 90-72) and go into the playoffs on a two-game winning streak." -Randy Bockus, 1-0, the last of five San Francisco pitchers, worked a hitless tenth for his first major-league victory. Dodgers 5, Padres 3: In San Diego, Steve Sax's homer ignited a three-run first that lifted Los Angeles. The Padres' Tony Gwynn, with a walk in his only at-bat, finished the season with a .370 average, the highest in the league since 1948, when Stan Musial hit .376. He also finished with 218 hits, the most by a Na-tional Leaguer since 1973, when Pete Rose of Cincinnati had 230.

Indians 10, Angels 6: In the American League, in Anaheim, California, Joe Carter drove in four runs with his 32d homer and a single to power Cleveland. The loss left California last in the American League West, marking the first time since the 1915 Phil-adelphia A's that a first-place team wound up in the cellar the following season.

lington, Texas, Jim Presley and Ken Phelps hit two-run homers to carry Seattle.

game losing streak, thoroughly final two times up. He finished with a 2-for-26 performance in the last seven games of the season. Before the finale, the Blue Jays gathered around the batting cage looking like togetherness night at an encounter group, as assorted players hugged, wrestled, teased, talked, jousted and dueled with the brooding slugger.

Rick Leach was in a particularly frisky mood, jabbing his bat at Bell in a good imitation of a martial-arts instructor. The Jays were intent upon having a good old normal time, despite what everybody might think about their six-game losing streak. Bell showed that he was in an upbeat mood by spotting a tele-vision crew hovering 15 feet away and pointing a warning "don't get in my face" finger at the crew.

With both Tony Fernandez and Ernie Whitt out with injuries, Bell had been seeing even fewer good pitches than usual — and had been lunging at whatever was thrown his way. But Sunday his teaumates were blatantly trying to make him feel this was insti to make him feel this was just another day at the old ballyard. It was hardly a typical day for the ushers, guards, and police of-ficers, who would have to keep order if the Tigers won. The last time the Tigers clinched anything it was the World Series in 1984, and then it was a scene from a futuristic horror film - "Escape from Motor City," perhaps.

The scene was ugly, with burning cars and flying bottles and roving bands of so-called fans, mostly, it seemed from the outlyighborhoods and suburbs.

The smoke and the mob was so bad outside the stadium that oan outside the stadium that many people were stuck late on that damp Sunday night. It wasn't exactly the siege of Leningrad, but Tom Monaghan, the owner of the Tigers, took pity on trapped journalists and air-lifted a whole helicopter full of pizzas from one helicopter full of pizzas from one of his Domino's Pizza stores.

If this sounds like a ping, that's exactly what it is. Mona-ghan's belicopter landed on the infield, and sides carried the hot cardboard boxes directly to the press box, the infusion of cheese and tomato sauce saving the lives of several hundred of America's greatest minds.

To avoid a repetition of the Monaghan Hold-the-Anchovies Mercy Airlift, the Detroit Police Department announced the following rules will be solidly en-forced this week around Tiger "The games are sold out, therefore, there will be: no loiter-ing; no ticket scalping; no alco-hol beverage consumption on the streets or lots; no after-games parties in lots or on streets; no tailgating parties. Whether or not you attend the game, you will not be allowed to park for the purposes of watching television and or consuming alcoholic beverages. No excessive noise (this includes loud radios)."

hardly crowds, spectators being deterred by pickets or the prospect of B-team football. And when Ateams members showed up, they didn't always fare well.

The biggest producer among the picket-line crossers was Gary Ho-geboom of Indianapolis, who threw five scoring passes in a 47-6 rout of Buffalo. But St. Louis and New England, with veterans playing lost to Washington and Cleveland, which had none.

"Maybe we had an advantage in that not any of our guys came in." said Coach Joe Gibbs after his Redskins beat the Cardinals, who had eight veterans suited up. "The same group was able to practice together for 10 days." The Browns beat the Patriots as running back Larry Mason, released during training camp, scored twice for Cleveland in a comedy of errors. Dallas didn't bother to use Danny White, Tony Dorsett or Mike Ren-fro in its 38-24 victory over the New York Jets, one of two previously unbeaten teams done in by the scrubs; Minnesota, which lost to Green Bay by 23-16, was the other.

Only 4,074 fans showed up in Philadelphia's Veterans Stadium, where 1,500 picketers blocked all but one gate and egg-throwing and car-smashing was reported as the new Chicago Bears trounced the Eagle replacements. There were 4,919 fans in the Pontiac Silverdome (capacity: 80,368) to watch the ersatz Tampa Bay Bues come rally from a 17-0 deficit to beat Detroit 31-27

Buffalo, Atlanta, Seattle, New England, Seattle and New Orleans had their smallest crowds ever, Mile High Stadium in Denver was only half full, the 38,494 dwindling to a few thousand as Houston finished off a 40-10 roung.

In Atlanta, where striking Falcons were joined in demonstrations by members of several other unions, fans gathered on the balco-nies of Fulton County Stadium to jeer striking players who had formed a picket line near a statue of Hank Asron. The strikers, pointing up at the fans, chanted, "You got gyped." The fans chanted in response, "We've got jobs."

A similar confrontation occurred in Foxboro, Massachussets, outside Sullivan Stadium, where the Patriots play. Pickets shouted at fans, "Shame, shame, shame, shame, while the ticketholders yelled back, "Game, game, game."

Union Reps Will Meet; May Drop Free Agency Bid

By Michael Janofsky New York Times Service

NEW YORK - Union representatives from the 28 National Football League teams were to meet Monday night in Chicago amid rising free agency as a bargaining demand.

Meanwhile, union and management negotiators both confirmed Sunday that the Rev. Jesse Jackson, a candidate for the Democratic presidential nomination, had offered to act as a which reached its 13th day Sunday.

Doug Allen, the union's assistant executive director, said from Washington that at Monday's meeting each representative would have a chance to express his thoughts regarding the strike and the issues that divide the union and the owners. But he emphasized that Gene Upshaw, the union's executive director and the meeting's chairman, had no agenda from which he would recommend dropping the demand for free agency.

Since the bargaining process began in April, the owners have insisted that they would never grant the players unrestricted free agency. After the talks broke off 10 days ago, Jack Donlan, the executive director of the owners' management council, said he would not return to the table unless the players abandoned the demand.

"It's not on the agenda." Allen said of a recommendation to drop free agency. "But that's up to the guys. It's for them to decide."

The union's bargaining position could also be affected by more strikers' returning to work. Last week, nearly 90 players went back.

Allen acknowledged that union leaders knew of some players who may be preparing to return, but be doubted reports indicating that entire teams were ready to break with the union.

Allen also said the union would consider ac-

A Golfer-Theologian's Book of Uncommon Prayer

OMAHA, Nebraska - A theology professor says his book of golf prayers won't lead to lower scores, but merely makes a humbly jesting request that God "deliver us from all bogeys."

Michael G. Lawler, a Creighton University professor, native of Scotland and golf fanatic, composed 19 prayers — one for each hole, including the 19th. Lawler combined the prayers with photographs of golf courses from around the world in From Tee to Green," a booklet that sold out in its first run this summer and is now in its second printing. "It's not a 'Golf with Lawler' book that will improve your short game or line up your putts for a fun, serious book." Lawler, a Roman Catholic layman who is dean of the Creighton's graduate school, wrote four theology books before he got the idea for the golf book from a friend who said there ought to be golf prayers "because it's such a damned hard thing to do." The prayers, set in the context of a golfer making his way around the course, are entreaties to the divinity with moods ranging from despair and resignation to clation and whimsy.

"We praise You for the birdies You have made to fly, and beg of You more birdies that are made to drop," Lawler writes in his "Prayer of Thanks and Praise" you," said Lawler, a 14-handicapfor the second hole. "Deliver us

The 'Eyes' of Elena Sofonova

By Felicity Barringer New York Times Service

MOSCOW — Elena Sofon-ova does it all with her eyes. She suffers with them, smiles with them, searches with them - now for love, now simply for self-respect. Soft and deep-set above the high Slavic cheekbones, they seem by far the strongest of her tools as an actress.

For her last two films, first the 1985 Soviet film "Winter Cherries" and now the widely admired Italian-Soviet offering, "Oci ciornie" ("Dark Eyes"), they have given her a way to evoke eloquently and almost silently the emotions of a charming and charmable woman who wants something more out of life than charm.

It is this determination that makes her a poignant and yet occasionally comic foil as the woman in a man's movie. For "Dark Eyes," directed by the So-viet director Nikita Mikhalkov, is largely a vehicle for Marcello Mastroianni As Romano — the aging ladies' man who has put self-centeredness on cruise control - he seeks out Sofonova in a small northern Russian town to renew their adulterous affair. The motifs are all drawn from Anton Chekhov - most obviously from his story "Lady With a Lapdog," but also from such works as "The Order of Anna" and "The Wife." So, in her 20th film, the 31-year-old Sofonova was able to score four firsts: first didn't have to do any adjusting. Chekhov is a writer. There are things you don't have to explain because she cannot live with him to the Americans or the British and with her husband, feeling Love is understandable anywhere guilty for betraying both.

But, for all the talk of universality, she felt the character of Anna Sergeyevna, with her turgid marriage and her hopeless affair, was uniquely Russian, and she and Mikhalkov had long discussions trying to pinpoint just what it was about the Russian character they wanted to convey.

Sofonova in "Dark Eyes": "Love is understandable anywhere in the world."

"We were trying to find the word to express it. We felt there was a main theme in the Russian character, but we couldn't ex-press it in a word. Then we found it. Anna Sergeyevna constantly a sense of blame. This constant feeling of responsibility, which she feels — like it or not — this same feeling of responsibility, we feel it and we bear it to the last." was able to score four firsts: first time playing Chekhov, first time playing opposite a world-famous leading man and first time playing for a largely non-Soviet audience.

As to the last, she said, "I whole lot that is mixed into this, and there's whal I wanted to are and that's what I wanted to express. That's why she leaves him,

The character is Sofonova's most recent stop in an odyssey of female heroines made for the of-ten formulaic and predictably emotional Soviet cinema. The journey started when Sofonova, then the 17-year-old daughter of a Russian actor, began making films in 1974. "In the beginning of my career

I just played myself. Later I found this was less interesting and I tried to incorporate things I saw around me. One character modern type, an ascetic. Whereveryou work, you have to use what and loves him. Nikita is the maser you work, you have to use what you see around you."
